Growing up with a passion for animals, I always knew that I would pursue a career in veterinary medicine. Since being at Louisiana Tech, I have had an overwhelming amount of support, as well as preparation, in pursuing this career. The hands-on experience that South Campus offers was my selling point to attend Tech; I'm not sure that any other school would have handed me a set of tools on the first day of class and allowed me to castrate a pig. Since then, I have started a job at the Tech Farm; I am also a participant in a research project regarding sheep diets. As an Agriculture Ambassador, it is easy for me to promote Tech and the Agricultural Sciences department due to my experiences here. Aside from Animal Science, I am a runner, and have been a member of the LA Tech Cross Country and Track and Field teams for three years. This past summer, I applied to LSU School of Veterinary Medicine, where I hope to further my education into a Doctor of Veterinary Medicine.
