

My name is Robynetta Hargrave. I am currently traveling in the state of California working as a Clinical Laboratory Scientist. However, my home will always be in the New Orleans area of Louisiana. Working in California has allowed me to help improve patient care by providing in depth laboratory knowledge of different computer information systems and clinical skills. When I am not working or studying, I enjoy devoting my time to my other passion by coaching girls' basketball. While traveling, I realized I wanted to further my education by pursuing a Masters in Health Information Management. I felt this area of study would allow me to better fulfill my position in assisting each hospital's laboratory, especially hospitals in rural areas with no designated employee assigned to laboratory information systems. I am excited that I choose to study at Louisiana Tech University, because I now have the tools to complete my mission of providing the best service to patients from the laboratory. As graduation is slowly approaching, I want to thank my teachers for this opportunity and for allowing me to grow in this field. Being a bulldog is one of the best decisions I have made thus far!
