Biography

Hilary Milott graduated from the Louisiana Tech University Dietetic Internship in May 2014. After graduation, she began working for the public health nutrition education program, Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) in Shreveport, Louisiana. Hilary is currently completing her graduate degree in nutrition and dietetics. After obtaining her B.S. in Dietetics from Illinois States University, she worked in at a community health center as a nutritionist for Near North Health Service Corporation in Chicago, IL. She would eventually like to obtain her Doctorate in Dietetics and close literature gaps concerning the early childhood health benefits of breastfeeding.

Statement about MS experience

I am proud to be completing my master of science in nutrition and dietetics at Louisiana Tech University. The online courses make it convenient for me to work at my own pace as I am also working full time. I have been able to apply the newest evidence based research garnered from these courses within my practice as a dietitian. The professors provide the necessary tools and guidance for me to be able to achieve my higher education goals. I highly recommend the Louisiana Tech nutrition and dietetics graduate program.
