

Alli Brister
Fashion Merchandising & Retail Studies

Being a student in the School of Human Ecology means that I am cared for and my success matters. All of the professors, advisors, and faculty create a positive environment and enjoy what they do. This in return, makes students like myself want to strive to be the best and be attentive to what is being taught inside the classroom. Unlike other students, I did not begin my college career in this particular college. I transferred into this college at the end of my sophomore year. I became interested in what Fashion Merchandising and Retail Studies had to offer and felt like it was a better fit for my career goal. I know that I made the right choice. I love participating in the hands on activities in class, having the ability to know fellow classmates due to the small class enrollment, and traveling to places such as New York and Dallas. I am honored to be selected as a featured student for the School of Human Ecology and am grateful for all the privileges this college has allowed me. In return, I hope to encourage others to join this college as I share my personal experience.